New Delhi: The government is working on big-ticket direct tax reforms and improve ease of compliance to complement the sharp reduction in the rates to make the regime more attractive for investors.

Under the new regime that is in advanced stage of preparation there will be zero physical interface between taxpayers and officials, cutting discretion of officers, government officials said. "Facile assessment has been a game changer... focus now will be on improving compliance. This will also lead to increased use of artificial intelligence besides making sectoral expertise imperative."

A dedicated body for direct taxes on the lines of Goods and Services Tax Network (GSTN) to provide data and information backbone is also under consideration, another official said. It would provide the direct taxes department the professional input that the indirect taxes get through their serving as a data repository.
